CHS Seniors Visit Cohasset Knoll

Twelve Cohasset seniors and their social studies teacher visited the Cohasset Knoll Nursing Home March 15.

Members of the Class of 1979 and their instructor, Edward Sheehan, head of the Social Studies Department at Cohasset High School, had received a verbal invitation from the facilities' social director, Jan Neri.

During their eventful stay at the maximum care nursing facility, the students were briefed by Miss Neri and then participated in an informal "rap session" with 30 patients. Miss Neri, who has instituted many innovative programs at The Knoll for its senior citizen residents, informed the students of the "dire need for outside community groups to visit the Knoll to communicate with the patients there."

When the visiting teenagers and senior citizens assembled in the spacious dayroom, questions and answers flew back and forth across the room. Neither the high schoolers nor the patients had any trouble relating to one another. One of the elderly patients proudly announced that she will be "100 years old come October 4." This delighted the assembled throng and cheers and a standing ovation followed.

Some of the topics discussed during the hour long "rap session" were: the general living conditions inside the facility, the loss of personal freedom suffered by the elderly who are confined there, the isolated spot the Knoll is located in, the generation gap that divides our younger and older citizens and the role religion plays among our senior citizens.

Students who went on the unique field trip were: Peter Chapman, Brian Conlan, Peter Cook, Charles Dillon,

Brad Ditmar, Keith Elam, Dave Hanlon, Bob Infusino, Steve Ramsay, Judy Vanderlugt, Jim Vivian and John Carbone.
